8)A Discussion on Gender Equality Begins at Home-16/12/2021

Home is where the heart is. But it's also the first place where children are socialized into gender norms, values and stereotypes. From the moment babies are born, their assigned sex (male or female) immediately begins to shape how they should be treated, what opportunities they should receive or how they should behave according to dominant gender stereotypes in their society. The most significant influence on gender role development occurs within the family setting, with parents modeling and passing on to their children their own beliefs about gender.

The Value Education Cell organized a "Discussion on Gender Equality Begins at Home". The session moderated by Ms. Ann Maria Joseph (Asst. Professor, Dept. Of Commerce). Students shared their opinions freely. Parents aren't entirely responsible for how their children perceive gender – much of the external world including peers, teachers, caretakers and the media have an impact on how children (and even parents themselves) think they should behave based on their assigned sex. The discussion mainly focused on Household chores would be a good starting point. When mothers, establish some ground rules that there are no girl-chores or boy-chores and both genders must be equally responsible and sensitive to their immediate surroundings and tasks around, we would have achieved some progress. Accountability is a must and so is involving the children in the decision making process. The session ended with the suggestion that while we strive to raise gender-sensitive children, let us also foster a gentleman and a lady.
